Chronology of same-sex marriage bills introduced into the federal parliament: a quick guide

Deirdre McKeown

Politics and Public Administration Section

The introduction of legislation on marriage equality has continued in the current (45th) Parliament. Since September 2016 four same-sex marriage bills have been introduced into the federal parliament, while six bills were introduced into the previous (44th) Parliament.

Since the 2004 amendment to the Marriage Act 1961 (Cth) which inserted the current definition of marriage, 22 bills dealing with marriage equality or the recognition of overseas same-sex marriages have been introduced into the federal Parliament. Four bills have come to a vote: three in the Senate (in 2010, 2012 and 2013), and one in the House of Representatives (in 2012). These bills were all defeated at the second reading stage; consequently no bill has been debated by the second chamber. To date, the bills have been introduced by members of parliament representing the Australian Democrats, Australian Greens, Australian Labor Party, Liberal Democratic Party, Liberal Party of Australia and by Independents.

A bill introduced into the House of Representatives in August 2015 was the first cross-party same-sex marriage bill introduced into the Parliament. An earlier House of Representatives bill, introduced by Opposition leader Bill Shorten, was the first time a same-sex marriage bill was introduced by the leader of a political party.

This Quick Guide provides a chronological list of bills relating to marriage equality introduced into the federal parliament, including bills restored to the Notice Paper or reintroduced in a later parliament. The information on each bill includes:

- whether or not a conscience vote was granted by the major parties (Note: Australian Greens policy is to support marriage equality, and the Australian Democrats had previously adopted a similar policy)
- links to each bill homepage and, where available, the bills digest and committee reports
- links to parliamentary speeches and answers to parliamentary questions
- type of bill: government or private
- changes in party policy
- comments by party leaders and other members of parliament where relevant
- status of the bill: current, defeated or lapsed and
- results of divisions in the Senate and House of Representatives.

The list also includes one government bill: the Marriage Amendment Bill 2004 which inserted the definition of marriage as the ‘union between a man and a woman’.

The list does not include the following plebiscite bills (in which no party was granted a conscience vote):

- the Marriage Equality Plebiscite Bill 2015 was introduced in the Senate on 19 August 2015. The previous week, the leader of the Australian Greens, Senator Richard Di Natale, had announced that the Greens and other members of the Senate crossbench would ‘put forward a bill to ensure a fair question on marriage equality is put to the people no later than the next election’. The Bill lapsed at the prorogation of the 44th Parliament.
- the Plebiscite \(Same-Sex\) Marriage\) Bill 2016 was introduced by the Prime Minister, Malcolm Turnbull, in the House of Representatives on 14 September 2016. The Bill fulfilled a Liberal Party election promise and sought to establish the legislative framework for a compulsory, in-person vote in a national plebiscite that would ask Australians ‘Should the law be changed to allow same-sex couples to marry?’. The Bill passed the lower House on 20 October 2016 but was defeated at the second reading stage in the Senate on 7 November 2016.

Additional information on conscience votes and same-sex marriage is available in the Parliamentary Library publications: Conscience votes on same-sex marriage legislation (D McKeown and R Lundie, 2011), Same-sex marriage (M Neilsen, 2012), Same-sex marriage brief (M Neilsen, 2013), Same-sex marriage: issues for the 44th Parliament (M Neilsen, 2015), Same-sex marriage: key issues for the 45th Parliament (M Neilsen, 2016) and various bills digests (links included in the following table).

Please note the following abbreviations: 2R (second reading), 3R (third reading), HoR (House of Representatives), Australian Democrats (AD), Australian Greens (AG), Australian Labor Party (ALP), Liberal Democratic Party (LDP), Liberal Party of Australia (LIB) and Independent (IND).

Background

Marriage Bill 1961

The Marriage Bill 1961 was first introduced into the House of Representatives on 19 May 1960 by Attorney-General Sir Garfield Barwick (LIB, NSW) as the Marriage Bill 1960. The Bill sought to introduce uniform marriage laws across Australia. In his second reading speech on 19 May 1960 Barwick noted that:

... it will be observed that there is no attempt to define marriage in this bill. None of the marriage laws to which I have referred contains any such definition.

The second reading debate was postponed to allow for consultations with the States and other interested organisations over the proposed administrative arrangements. On 18 August 1960 the Bill passed the second reading stage in the House of Representatives without a division. On 8 September 1960 Barwick announced that various adjustments to the Bill were required. He proposed circulating amendments, withdrawing the Bill at the committee stage and replacing it with a new Bill incorporating the amendments. The Bill lapsed before the committee stage because the second session of the Parliament was closed on 9 December 1960.

On 21 March 1961 Barwick reintroduced the Bill (Marriage Bill 1961) stating that it incorporated:

... the amendments which would have been dealt with in committee, together with the original bill, had it been found possible to proceed with the committee stage. As I have said, that was not found possible and the 1960 bill has now lapsed.

In the same speech he also said:

Because of the similarity between the Marriage Bill 1960 and the present bill, and because of the very full second-reading debate in this House last year, the present bill will go to the committee stage without a second-reading debate.

Both major parties (ALP and LIB) were granted a conscience vote on the Bill. On 22 March 1961 the Bill passed the second and third reading stages in the House of Representatives without divisions.

The Bill was introduced into the Senate on 23 March 1961 and passed the second reading stage on 18 April 1961 without division. On the same day, during the committee stage, Senator George Hannan (LIB, Vic.) sought to insert a definition of marriage as ‘the voluntary union of one man with one woman for life to the exclusion of all others’ but this was defeated 40–8. The Bill passed the third reading stage without division.

Marriage Amendment Bill 2004
Year	2004
Status	Current (in force)
Government Prime Minister	Coalition John Howard
Parties with a conscience vote	None
Bill type	Government
Description	The Marriage Legislation Amendment Bill 2004 sought to amend the Marriage Act 1961 (Cth) to define marriage as a union of a man and a woman; and clarify that same-sex marriages entered into under the law of another country would not be recognised in Australia; and Family Law Act 1975 (Cth) to prevent intercountry adoptions by same sex couples under multilateral or bilateral agreements or arrangements. The Bill was referred to a Senate Committee for inquiry but within a day of its referral a second Bill (the Marriage Amendment Bill 2004) was introduced into Parliament. This second Bill did not contain the amendments relating to overseas adoption — these being the ones that the Labor Party had indicated it would not support. At the same time, the parliamentary committee inquiry into the first Bill was also abandoned. The rationale for this unusual and dramatic change of direction was so that the Bill would have a speedy passage through the Parliament. (See Same-sex marriage, Background Note, p. 5.) The Bill was introduced into the HoR on 27/05/04 and passed the 2R and 3R stages on 17/06/04 without division. The Bill was introduced into the Senate on 18/06/04. The 2R moved on the same date. Bill homepage Bills digest The second bill, the Marriage Amendment Bill 2004, sought to amend the Marriage Act 1961 (Cth) to define marriage as a union of a man and a woman; and clarify that same-sex marriages entered into under the law of another country will not be recognised in Australia. Attorney-General Phillip Ruddock (LIB, NSW) stated in his 2R speech that: The bill is necessary because there is significant community concern about the possible erosion of the institution of marriage ... A related concern held by many people is that there are now some countries that permit same-sex couples to marry. The amendments to the Marriage Act contained in this bill will make it absolutely clear that Australia will not recognise same-sex marriages entered into under the laws of another country, whatever that country may be. Bill homepage Bills digest

Comments	In the 2R debate Senator Sue Boyce (LIB, Qld) said 'I would like to put on record my support for the intention of this Marriage Amendment Bill (No. 2) 2012'. Senator Cory Bernardi (LIB, SA) said: If we are prepared to redefine marriage ... then what is the next step? The next step ... is having three people or four people that love each other being able to enter into a permanent union endorsed by society—or any other type of relationship ... There are even some ... people out there ... [who say] it is okay to have consensual sexual relations between humans and animals. Will that be a future step?

Comments	On 27/05/15, in answer to a Question without Notice from Bill Shorten, Leader of the Opposition, on allowing a conscience vote on same-sex marriage, Prime Minister Tony Abbott said: ... If, because of the actions of this parliament, a private member's bill were to be brought on for a vote, at that point in time, this matter—as is well known—would be handled by the coalition party room. This is an important issue. It is not the only important issue facing our country right now, but it is an important issue. It is an issue upon which there are sharply divided views inside this parliament, inside our respective political parties and, indeed, as is well known, even inside my own family. It is important that all views be treated with respect, because this is one of those subjects upon which decent people can disagree. Now, I cannot foresee the future. I do not know how our society will develop. I do not know how this parliament will proceed in the months and years ahead. I do just make this one point, though. If our parliament were to make a big decision on a matter such as this, it ought to be owned by the parliament and not by any particular party. So I would ask the Leader of the Opposition and all members of parliament to consider this as we ponder these subjects in the weeks and months to come.

Comments	On 26 July 2015, the ALP National Conference agreed to continue the existing policy and allow members a conscience vote on same-sex marriage until 2019 after which (on the commencement of the 46th Parliament) members will be bound to support same-sex marriage. Opposition leader, Bill Shorten, promised that within 100 days of a Labor government being elected he would ‘move in the parliament of Australia for marriage equality for Australians’. On 11 August 2015 the Coalition party room considered its position on same-sex marriage in a six hour meeting. The following day, in response to a Question without Notice, Prime Minister Tony Abbott, referred to the result of the party room meeting and stated: The government [has] ... done what we said we would do before the election. Before the election, I said that if this matter was to come up in this parliament it would be dealt with by the coalition party room in the usual way ... This matter was discussed by our party room ... for fully six hours yesterday; some 90 members of the party room had their say. By a very strong majority, essentially by two to one, we decided to confirm our existing position for this term of parliament, the position that we took to the election, that marriage is between a man and a woman. The Prime Minister also raised the possibility of holding a plebiscite or referendum on the issue during the term of the next parliament. In the same answer he said: Our strong disposition is to go into the next election with a commitment to put this to the people.

Comments	Deputy Leader of the Opposition, Tanya Plibersek, reintroduced the Labor Party's 2015 Bill which had been removed from the Notice Paper and explained the reason for the 2016 Bill: When we heard that coalition MPs did not feel they could support a bill introduced by the Leader of the Opposition [in 2015], we withdrew our bill to allow another to be put forward, sponsored by backbenchers from all parties. Neither the Leader of the Opposition nor I cared whose name was on the bill, only that it would pass ... He [Prime Minister Malcolm Turnbull] signed on to the plebiscite-delaying tactic to secure the support of the Liberal Party's right wing. We know it is nothing but a delaying tactic because there is no sign of movement from this government ... That is why, today, we will try to put right some of that by reintroducing a bill for marriage equality ... [S]adly, it is unlikely this bill will pass this week. But our push for full equality is not going away. Think of this bill as a marker.
